
Pepper likes Tuna

Oh no... I cant even be mad anymore.
Look at Pepper. She thinks this was a brilliant operation.
She is absolutely proud of herself.
All right, suspect. Where did the tuna go?
We may need a full confession.

State your name for the record.
And your relationship to this missing tuna.
Mrrp.
Interesting. The witness claims innocence.
Despite overwhelming fish-based evidence.
Okay, this is kind of amazing.
Tiny sushi thief. No remorse.

Well, we still have salmon.
If we guard it with our lives.
Nice try. The salmon is under protection.
Youve already had your victory banquet.
The ruined dinner somehow becomes the best part of the night.
I guess cozy night is still on.
With stricter tuna security next time.

You know she's going to do this again.

Then we plan accordingly.

Paw off the evidence.

Pepper, if you want sushi night, you need better table manners.

And less crime.

Not the dinner they planned. Still a perfect night.

Pepper likes Tuna

Tina and Mom's shock over the missing tuna gives way to laughter when they catch Pepper proudly showing off the results of the heist. They turn the crime scene into a playful interrogation, treating Pepper like a tiny sushi thief with zero remorse. Instead of letting the disaster ruin the evening, they rescue the salmon, protect it from any second attack, and settle back into their cozy TV night. By the end, the lost tuna has become a family joke and a warm memory instead of a ruined dinner.

mycomics.ai - 4 May 2026